I am by no means a huge gambler, I like to throw some money on a game here and there and every once in a while I do enjoy sitting down at a blackjack table in a casino.

But one thing I do understand is the math behind it. I refuse to come off as a sore loser who sounds like a complete moron, but someone needs to explain to me why when I play the demo, the cards seem to tilt in my favor, the dealer busts once every 3-4 hands, and the dealer shows a 2,3,4,5 or 6 once about every 5-8 hands (yes, I counted through many games and averaged it) Tj T* E

Now here's the conundrum:

As soon as I switch over to real blackjack where I use real funds, everything I just mentioned above flips on its axis.

I do not want to say that I have come to the conclusion that it's rigged, so I'm generously falling back on to the fact that they do not use shoes, but rather generate a RANDOM numbered card every time a card is drawn, which takes a way from the finite aspect to a deck.

Hypothetically, they can draw more than the standard 96 - 10 cards (10,J,Q,K) that are in a standard 6 deck shoe in a casino, in less draws than the amount of draws that are even mathematically possible in a 6 deck shoe - all due to the random generated numbers.

I doubt this is even illegal, but rather a heads up to stay away from DraftKings
